DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Pierre Corneille (pronounced Kor-Nay) is considered one of the three best dramatists of seventeenth century France. A contemporary of Moliere and Racine, Corneille is primarily known as a writer of tragedies and The Liar is one of his few comedies. David Ives, a Chicago born and Northwestern educated playwright, adapted The Liar for The Shakespeare Theatre Company in Washington, D.C. in 2010 and it won the Charles MacArthur Award for Outstanding New Play at the Helen Hayes Awards in Washington the following year. It is often difficult for a translation and adaptation of a play to catch the spirit of the times in which it was written and yet have an appeal for a modern audience. David Ives has accomplished that task in this play. While keeping the structure of the play in the Neo classic form used by Corneille, including writing in verse, and adhering to the unities of time and place, Ives uses modern references and nomenclature to appeal to a contemporary audience. He also breaks the fourth wall and has the actors speak directly to the audience at times, a technique that would have been quite common in the theatre of 17th century France. The cast has worked hard to bring this fast paced comedy to you and we hope that you enjoy The Liar.
